Articles in this section

Rule 1: Hit Your Profit Target

Rule 2: Do Not Exceed Maximum Position Size

Rule 3: Do Not Hit End-Of-Day (EOD) Maximum Trailing Drawdown

Rule 4: Trade Approved Products, During Approved Hours

Rule 5: Be Consistent

Rule 6: No Counter Positions

Rule 3: Do Not Hit End-Of-Day (EOD) Maximum Trailing Drawdown

Vlada
3 months ago · Updated

How the EOD Trailing Drawdown Works

The End-of-Day (EOD) trailing drawdown is one of the most common reasons accounts fail.
To simplify the process, the drawdown for test accounts is calculated only at the end of the trading day, not during open trades.

Your EOD trailing drawdown amount is listed in the account table.

Futures

Futures Account Size	Maximum Position Size	Profit Target	Maximum Trailing Drawdown
$25,000	3 Contracts	$1,500	$1,500
$50,000	6 Contracts	$3,000	$2,000
$75,000	9 Contracts	$4,500	$2,500
$100,000	12 Contracts	$6,000	$3,000
$150,000	15 Contracts	$9,000	$4,500

In your dashboard (Control Center), this value appears as Minimum Account Balance.

Example

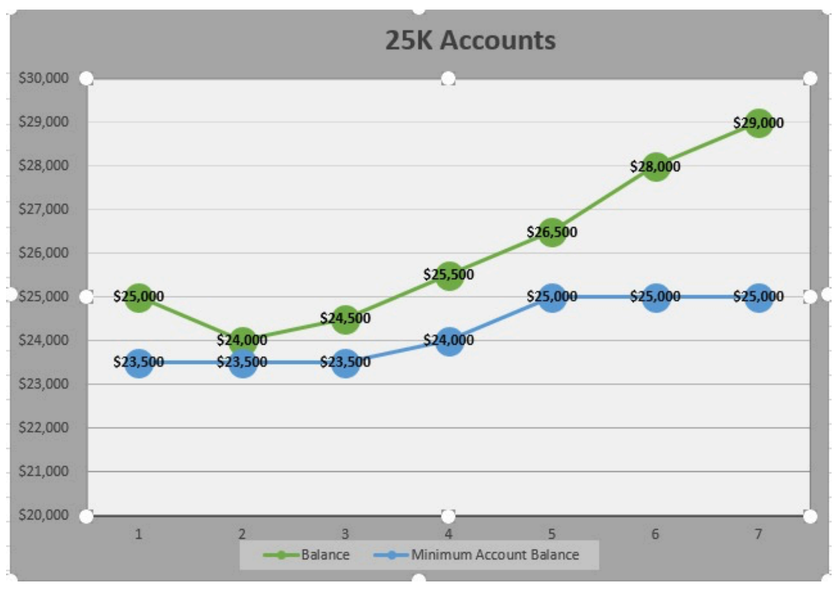
For a 25,000 account:

- The trailing drawdown is 1,500.
- The minimum account balance starts at 23,500 (25,000 – 1,500).

The drawdown is called "trailing" because the minimum account balance follows your highest end-of-day balance upward.

Example movement:

- If you earn 1,000 on Day 1, your end-of-day balance becomes 26,000.
- The minimum account balance moves to 24,500 (still 1,500 behind the highest EOD balance).
- This continues until the minimum account balance reaches the original starting balance of 25,000.
- Once it reaches that point, it stops trailing and remains fixed.



When an Account Fails

If your account drops to the Minimum Account Balance at any time — through realized or unrealized losses — the account is immediately liquidated.

Was this article helpful?

Yes No

31 out of 35 found this helpful

Recently viewed articles

Rule 2: Do Not Exceed Maximum Position Size

Rule 1: Hit Your Profit Target

Rule 4: Trade Approved Products, During Approved Hours

Rule 5: Be Consistent

PRO Account Rules

Related articles

Rule 4: Trade Approved Products, During Approved Hours

Rule 5: Be Consistent

PRO Account Rules

Rule 1: Hit Your Profit Target

Rule 2: Do Not Exceed Maximum Position Size